

'High rise' parenting is the reality many Aussie families face

By Harriet Armstrong

In fact, families with children represent 44 per cent of apartment dwellers in Australia.

"We just love that we have access to facilities that we could not afford in a house. We are close to work, schools, the city and we can go out and do a lot of fun things," mother-of-two Jane De Graaff told TODAY show co-host Georgie Gardner.

"The apartments we live in have several swimming pools, including an indoor one so we can swim anytime of the year. And there is a tennis court and park out the back."